As international tourist numbers in Japan return to their pre—pandemic heights and Japan seemingly moves towards ever greater military spending and a more active military posture, international interest is growing in Japan's public memory and treatment of its past through museums and heritage sites related in conflict and empire in Japan. This event, featuring leading international experts on Japan's war heritage and public memory, will explore these issues within their broader Japanese context and in relation to the newly renovated content of Ritsumeikan's peace museum.
